SPEAKER'S RULING

“On Tuesday April 2, 2013, the member for Halifax Atlantic raised a point of privilege respecting the significance of Section 33 of the House of Assembly Act which provides in part that the ‘House is a court of record, and has all the rights and privileges of a court of record for the purpose of summarily inquiring into and punishing the acts, matters and things herein declared to be violations of [the] Act’.

I will not repeat all the details of her point of privilege. They are set out in full in Hansard of the day. The member described several past instances in which she believed that her privileges were breached; however, she stated that they were appropriately disposed of and that she was not requesting a re-examination of those matters. The member has not raised any unresolved instances.

The process with respect to a question of privilege is clearly established. A question of privilege arises out of an event, the alleged facts of which must ultimately be adjudicated and a determination made as to whether the facts as found result in the infringement of a member's or the House's privileges or the commission of a contempt against the House. A question of privilege is not answered in abstract. A finding of a prima facie question of privilege results in the question being given precedence over other House business. An abstract or hypothetical question should not take precedence over other House business. In Parliamentary Privilege in Canada (2nd edition) at page 222, Maingot states that there ‘must be some act that improperly interferes with the Member's rights.’

An additional difficulty with an abstract or hypothetical question is the requirement that a member should ‘demonstrate that the matter is being brought to the House's attention at the first opportunity’ as provided by O'Brien and Bosc in House of Commons Procedure and Practice (2nd edition) at page 144. This would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, with an abstract or hypothetical question. The member for Halifax Atlantic has not demonstrated that she has met this requirement.

Although the member has raised a number of questions that may indeed be important, that the member may consider pressing and that the House may ultimately choose to deal with, the member has not alleged any facts that I may consider as to whether they give rise to a prima facie breach of privilege.

The member states in her submission that she is ‘gravely concerned that [her] service as a member may expose [her] to the possibility of inadvertently committing offences under the [House of Assembly] Act ...’. Her concern is hypothetical. Without a specific allegation of a possible breach of privilege, there is nothing for me to consider and respond to. Therefore, I find that there is no prima facie point of privilege.

The member for Halifax Atlantic has other recourse with respect to the questions she has raised. She is free to put her proposed resolution before the House by giving notice of motion in the usual fashion.

That is the ruling on this matter. Thank you.”
